1. 1a. Demonstrate a detailed knowledge of the historical trends and significant developments in the field of leadership studies.
1b. Recognise and assess the qualitative difference between a range of complementary and competing theoretical and methodological perspectives in the academic and practitioner literature on leadership and management.

2. 2a. Describe and evaluate the complex relationship between leadership, management, and organisational performance.
2b. Apply and utilize theories and models of leadership and leadership development in practice and show an awareness of the wider ethical and sustainability implications and consequences of these.

3. 3a. Plan, conduct, and organise your own independent research of leadership and associated academic literatures.
3b. Develop scholarship skills through critical thinking, oral presentation, group discussion and extended academic writing.
3c. Express verbally and in writing the benefits and challenges of using academic knowledge to inform organisational strategy and everyday practice.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy

Lectures will be 1 hour per week and used to explore concepts, principles and theories in the nominated fields and will provide students with information required to enhance critical understanding of research and theory in leadership and associated fields of study, LO: 1a, 1b, 2a, 2b.

These will be supported by a range of student-led activities in seminars 2 hours per week giving students opportunities to develop skills of analysis through case studies and videos, to practise discipline skills in group exercises and role-plays, and undertake self-assessment.
of skills and capabilities using established instruments (eg. questionnaires, psychometric tests).
Seminars will aid the development of skills of evaluation and assessment within the field of leadership studies and the arena of people management, LO: 2a, 2b, 3b, 3c.
Oral formative feedback will be given as part of seminars. Directed study will encourage students to extend their understanding of research and theory in leadership.
Formal assessment is via group presentation, LO: 1a, 2a, 3a, 3b and an individual coursework essay LO: 1a, 1b, 2a, 2b, 3a, 3b, 3c.
