Module Aims

To explore different methods and approaches for responding to conflict, in different contexts, drawing on both theory and practitioner experience;
To develop your understanding of the criteria and conditions for effective and ethical responses to conflict, with critical recognition of the challenges and dilemmas that can arise in practice;
To provide opportunities for you to gain practical experience in responding to conflict, through the use of simulations and role play exercises, and reflection on relevant experience.

Module Learning Outcomes

On successful completion of this module, students will be able to...

1. a) identify and critically evaluate a range of different responses to conflict, including both formal and informal approaches, recognising the strengths and limitations of each;
b) discuss, with reference to relevant concepts, theories and case-studies, key practical and ethical questions arising in conflict situations;
c) reflect systematically on experiences of conflict and your own responses to them, making connections between experience and relevant debates in the academic literature.

2. a) demonstrate enhanced skills relevant for responding to conflict, in one or more of the following areas: conflict analysis, facilitation, mediation, negotiation, dialogue and deliberation.
b) Reflect critically on your progress in developing relevant skills for responding to conflicts of different types and in different contexts.

3. a) demonstrate enhanced skills in written and oral communication, academic research, and reflective practice.

Learning, Teaching and Assessment Strategy

The course will include a mixture of formal, structured learning activities (lectures, and small-group work), opportunities for experiential and problem-based learning, and independent academic work. Assessment will involve a range of assignments, linked to different themes and tasks in the module, submitted together as a portfolio of work which demonstrates the achievement of learning outcomes.
