Introduction

This programme has been specifically designed to allow students to study law and business in combination to provide a genuinely interdisciplinary degree. It enables students to study key law modules which give them a good grasp of general legal skills and principles and also to study business and management modules which gives them an insight into one or more specific areas of that discipline. In addition, our programme is designed to study the impact of law on business and business on law and the interaction between the two disciplines. Their law options in particular are therefore focused on those issues which might be important in and relevant to a business context. Study of this programme is enhanced through learning opportunities such as the opportunity to undertake a dissertation or other legal project work as well as extra-curricular activities such as taking part in a business challenge or moot which will enable students to develop a clear understanding of the context in which diverse businesses and legal practices operate in society.

The programme learning outcomes have been developed with reference to the nationally agreed subject benchmark statements for Law and for Business and Management published by the Quality Assurance Agency for Higher Education, at www.qaa.ac.uk

Curriculum

Students will study a total of 120 credits every year to achieve the BSc (Honours) Business Studies and Law. Over the course of their degree students will study half their credits from Law options and half from Business and Management options. In the first year students will study Legal Relationships, Sources and Institutions which provides them with a framework of knowledge which will help them understand other legal topics as they progress through their degree. Students will learn important academic legal skills as well as become familiar with the English Legal System as it sits in a global context, the relationship between the State and individuals as well as key powers in law making and interpretation. Business, Law and Ethics which will give them the opportunity to consider how ethical issues impact on legal and business contexts. Students then take 60 credits worth of Business and Management modules. Students can choose modules focussing on operations management, human resources, finance, marketing or international business. Students can then follow a pathway through their degree which focuses on those aspects of business and management they are most interested in. For example, they could select marketing modules throughout their degree to sit alongside the law modules' or they could focus on issues as they relate to people in the workplace by choosing options around employee relations or human resource management. If students are interested in financial aspects of business, they can also focus on those. The Programme Leader or Personal Academic Tutor will give students more information as well as suggested routes and module tutors are on hand to advise.

In the second year students study The Law of Tort as well as Law in a Global Context in Semester 2. They will then also be required to take Law in the Community 1 which will help them think about their options after graduation and their role as a professional and further develop their research skills. Students can then choose their business and management options to follow their chosen path, or, prerequisite permitting, get involved in a new area. In their final students should select 60 credits from Law and 60 credits from Business and Management.

Learning and Teaching Strategy

The Learning Teaching and Assessment strategy on our Business Studies and Law has been designed to help students develop their knowledge, understanding and skills over the course of their studies. We recognise that students will require more guidance and support in their first semester than they will in their final one and our programme is designed to ensure that students get appropriate support throughout. This means that in their first year of study they will receive a lot of skills training early on to help students acquire the skills needed for successful legal study. In the first year students will study modules which introduce them to the context in which law and business operate and the topics covered in this year will provide the framework for further study. The business and management modules they choose in their first year provide the context for their further study of the subjects. The second year builds on the first by introducing a greater variety of legal topics, all relevant to business and additional business and management options and professional skills which can then be honed further in the final year.

Teaching and module delivery patterns vary and they vary for a number of reasons. First, we recognise that students come to us with different learning styles and we need to ensure that all students are given the opportunity to succeed. We believe this is best achieved by including a variety of teaching methods and patterns. In addition, as teachers, we also have different strengths and weaknesses as well as preferences and we want to ensure that students get the benefit of us using our skills most effectively. Finally, some topics lend themselves particularly well to certain types of teaching. Students can therefore expect to take part in traditional lectures on some occasions, have tutorials in groups of no more than 25 students or larger workshops where they might engage in problem based or team based learning to solve legal problems. All modules are supported by materials provided through the Virtual Learning Environment including for example a module handbook, session hand-outs, sample questions, reading lists and discussion forums and by a dedicated module leader who will be available to support their learning.

Assessment Strategy

Assessment on the programme is also varied and where possible students will be permitted choice in how they demonstrate that they meet the learning outcomes of the module and the programme overall. We also have a wide variety of forms of assessment including examinations, traditional essays, portfolios of work, presentations and other coursework. We have designed our programmes to ensure that students are not over assessed and that the assessment they do have to complete contributes to their learning in a meaningful way. The assessments are designed to encourage them to think critically about legal and business problems rather than just learn and recite materials.

Assessment Regulations

This Programme conforms to the standard University Assessment Regulations which are available at the link below
